- Today we enter to the mysterious world of curiosity. What role does it play in the education of our children?
- Se It is said that a child without curiosity is a human being that in the future will hardly be able to answer who he is, because our interests define us and give us tools to expand our mind and develop ourselves.
- Thanks to a variety of investigations of the Michigan University, it is known today that the development of the curiosity of children allow, among others:
 - Better academic performance
 - Better self esteem, because we know more ourselves, therefore, we have more security in life.
 - Greater capacity for pleasure and enjoyment on a daily basis
 - Ability to achieve deeper learning.
 - Greater resolution capacity in adulthood
- Therefore, we can conclude that a curious child has more tools for life, because, his learnings have been from the emotion, from lived experience and from the interest to learn; what entails that that child as an adult will have more expansive thoughts that will allow them to do new things, thus, cultivating a desire to explore the world and to create new things to benefit both the human being and the whole humanity.
